

Output:

The `strace` command was used to trace the system calls generated by `cat sample.txt`. The `execve()` system call executes the `cat` program. `openat()` opens the file, `read()` reads its contents, `write()` displays the contents on standard output, and `close()` closes the file. These system calls allow the user-level `cat` program to request file and I/O services from the Linux kernel.